Eazel (inkscape) Eazel is a vector image editor that lets users create graphics, edit paths, or apply multiple "inks" such as type fonts, patterns, or text. Eazel is also a free open-source (meaning it is a shareware project, which is free to download and use, but not free to distribute or sell). Eazel is designed with multiple effects such as "ink merging," so you can add type and pattern attributes to an image or to a path. Eazel has a number of applications:

- * To create graphic designs, image patterns, or text using vector software such as Adobe Illustrator
- * To layer and position images
- * To create complex, overlapping, or layered designs
- * To define stylistic edges that allow line design decisions and to create clean, crisp edges

Eazel's "ink merging" feature makes it possible to place text on overlapping objects or as a design overlay and to have the result look like the original design. Eazel is designed to work with other vector editors and tools, and is easy to learn for beginners. Adobe released Inkscape in January 2004 with an early version of the software available as a free download from the Adobe website (www.adobe.com/products/photoshop/sketch_app/index.html). You can apply an overlay effect to an object in Eazel. An overlay effect replaces one object with another, for example, making it easy to create icons for use on a web site. You can also create shapes, paths, and

Crayola, the centuries-old maker of paper crayons, is going out of business, the company announced Monday. The company, which has been struggling for years, said that demand for its primary product — felt-tipped pens — is shrinking, particularly from children. Over the past six months, the company has had "distressing" sales of its crayons, the company said in a statement. Between December 2018 and May 2019, the crayon category grew just 3%, compared to a 6.1% growth in paints and stains during the same period, according to Euromonitor International. The felt-tipped pen category declined by 10%. "Paper-based writing instruments are an important part of our heritage, but as children's use of our products increasingly shifts to digital devices, we have seen a decline in demand for the product line as we have never experienced before," Crayola CEO David E. Scott said in a statement. Crayola first launched in the U.S. in the mid-1920s, building its brand on paints, crayons, and markers. But today, products like the Crayola Color Wonder set, which includes a crayon, marker, pencil, and eraser, represent only 4% of the brand's $2.67 billion in revenue. The Company, which derives its name from the color clay, has also failed to attract a new generation of consumers, according to a Wall Street Journal report published earlier this year. Though its products have remained a strong sellers — Crayola pens are the third most popular choice among students, according to The Wall Street Journal — other companies in the same space have experienced increased growth. In a letter to shareholders that was shared on Twitter Monday, Scott said that while the company "had previously overestimated the growth of crayon demand, we now believe that the trend is clear." The company also hasn't managed to win over parents, even though the majority of consumers under 16 use the crayons products, according to the Consumer Technology Association. Crayola first launched in the U.S. in the mid-1920s, building its brand on paints, crayons, and markers. Shutterstock The company said that sales of crayons in the U.S. are now at a "historic low." Last year, only 5.2 million sets were sold in the United States,

The Metropolitan police said the pizza was sent in the early hours of Friday, three days after Kotey's British jailhouse escape. The Daily Telegraph newspaper said the pizza had been sent to Kotey's former home in Letchworth, Hertfordshire. A Met spokesman told the Guardian: "We are investigating an allegation that an individual sent a pizza to a house in the early hours of Friday." The pizza is suspected to have come from Yumma Abu Suleiman's restaurant, which is 30 miles north of the Isis stronghold of Raqqa in Syria. A spokesman for the restaurant said: "We are happy to confirm that we supplied a delivery of pizza to a house on Hamilton Road, Letchworth, on Friday morning. We do not know why. We are looking into this. It is not something we regularly do and we are unable to discuss further as this is a private investigation." In the early hours of last Thursday, Kotey escaped his cell at the Thameside prison in southeast London with two other prisoners, Jamaican national Marwan Sabharwal and Greek national Yara Salloum. They were recaptured, with no injuries, on Saturday. The escape prompted Downing Street to order a new
